UC SANTA BARBARA

February 7, 2017 Nora Drake

'Emerging Filmmakers'

The work of UC Santa Barbara student filmmakers will hit the big screen as part of the 2017 Santa Barbara International Film Festival (SBIFF).

Three short documentaries and one short fiction film — all produced by students in UCSB's film and media studies department — are featured in the festival lineup, which continues through Feb. 11.

"We couldn't be more thrilled to showcase films created by UCSB students at the 2017 SBIFF," said Amanda Graves, the festival's education director. "The selection of films addresses critical environmental, preservation and conservation issues affecting Santa Barbara's Gaviota region. We encourage our community to attend the festival screenings to support the emerging filmmakers and to celebrate their achievements."

All of the films selected came out of lecturer Chris Jenkins' course in environmental media production, known on campus as GreenScreen. "I am so proud of this group of students," said Jenkins. "They worked so hard and really delivered fantastic work in a relatively short period of time, and the films they created are all quite different."

About the student films chosen for the festival:

• "The Hostage" is a fictional dark comedy that follows two incompetent kidnappers as they argue about how to get rid of a very resilient victim without polluting.

- "Planted" explores the culture of veganism through a charismatic carnivore who engages with local farms, chefs and activists to learn about a more sustainable way of eating.
- "The 11" is a documentary short exploring the lives of people who ride Santa Barbara Metropolitan Transit District's Line 11 bus. The film breaks the barriers between strangers using the same form of public transportation, proving that everyone has a story to tell.
- "The Beelievers" delves into the eccentric world of backyard beekeeping, exploring a small but powerful way that almost anyone can help the planet.

In addition to guiding students through the filmmaking process, Jenkins directed a film of his own — which also was accepted by the festival. "Lost Crops," a short documentary, tells the story of a Santa Barbara-based doctor who teams up with an experienced botanist and humanitarian in search of sustainable superfoods.

"Lost Crops," "Planted," "The 11" and "The Beelievers" will screen as part of the Santa Barbara Documentary Shorts program, a slate of short non-fiction films addressing local issues. The films will screen at Metro 4 Theatre on Tuesday, Feb. 7, at 8:40 p.m. and on Friday, Feb. 10, at 5:40 p.m.

"The Hostage" is part of the Santa Barbara Shorts program, which consists of five short fiction films screening at 8:40 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 9, at Metro 4 Theatre and at 5:40 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 11.

Approximately 50 students collaborated on the crews of the selected films, participating in all aspects of filmmaking, from directing and producing to editing, sound engineering, cinematography and camera operation. More information about the festival, including a complete schedule, can be found at http://sbiff.org/.

About UC Santa Barbara

The University of California, Santa Barbara is a leading research institution that also provides a comprehensive liberal arts learning experience. Our academic community of faculty, students, and staff is characterized by a culture of interdisciplinary collaboration that is responsive to the needs of our multicultural and global society. All of this takes place within a living and learning environment like no other, as we draw inspiration from the beauty and resources of our extraordinary location at the edge of the Pacific Ocean.