Background Briefing

The University of California, Santa Barbara has received a record 45,997 applications for undergraduate admission to the campus for fall 2005.

Of this total:

- 37,460 applications were from prospective first-year students---809 more than last year.
- 8,523 were from applicants seeking to transfer to UCSB---217 more than last year. (Just over a dozen other applicants fall in special categories not reflected in these totals, such as someone seeking a second bachelor's degree.)

The campus has a target enrollment of 4,025 first-year students for next fall and an estimated 1,555 transfer students. Decisions on freshman applications will be made by mid-March, and on transfer applications the following month.

The UC Office of the President today posted statistics on undergraduate applications to all UC campuses on its web site:

Applicants for the Fall 2005 Freshman Class

- The total number of applications received by UCSB for the freshman class is 809 more than last year, an increase of 1.9 percent. Four campuses in the UC system experienced decreases in undergraduate application numbers while the others saw increases. Over all, applications to the UC system increased 2.8 percent. There was a drop in applications to the UC system from out-of-state students (401) and an increase in applications from international students (156).
- Applications to UCSB from students in the top 4 percent of their high school class make up 14.5 percent of the applicant pool, or 5,059, an increase of 458 over last year. (The University of California system, under its Eligibility in the Local Context program, guarantees that such students will be admitted to a UC campus, although that campus might not be a student's first choice.)
- Over the past three years, applications to UC campuses from prospective freshmen have decreased by 1 percent. At UCSB over the same period, applications have increased 0.4 percent.
- Of the 76,152 prospective freshmen that applied to one or more UC campus this year, half of them included UCSB among the campuses to which they applied.

- Californians account for 93 percent of UCSB's undergraduate applicant pool.
